A PLEA FOR

THE

PARLIAMENT,

0 R,

XIX. CONSIDERATIONS

FOR

The satisfaction of such, who are apt to be missed by a Malignant party against the PARLIAMENT, VVith a palpable and evident DECLARATION of their chiefest Designes therein.

The second Edition, Corrected and amended, with additions.

London Reprinted for William Ley. 1642.

A PLEA for the PARLIAMENT,

Considerations for the satisfaction of such, who are apt to be mis-led by a Malignant party against the Parliament, with a pulpable and evident Declaration of their chiefest designes therein.

Or as much as it appeares, that a Malignant Party hath endeavoured to raise up strength, and to take up Armes against the Parliament, consisting of the King, Lords, and Commons of the Land, and to increase their number by many and falle reproachfull calumnies cast upon them, suggesting unto people many disjoynted and invalid positions to enshare the mindes of men, and although by the late Remonstrances there is sufficient satisfaction given to every judicious and intelligent Reader; yet for as much as these Remonstrances are many in number, and each of them relating to some particular occurrences or other preceding, some people having seen them all, others but some of them, and others none at all; and for as much as many almost in all places both in pulpits discourses and other wayes, (friends to the Popish party) have and doe daily endeavour to stir up a most ingratefull and unworthy discipled unto the Parliament who may once learne better, when better taught by the Parliaments last. There are therefore these considerations presenting themselves to every mans view, being almost nothing but what is obvious to every mans knowledg, & for the most part evident in all the late Remonstrances.

First, that men would consider, when it pleasedGod after many Prayers and Petitions of the people to grant this Parliament, what were the complaints of the whole Kingdome in matters both of Church and State, and the miserable oppressions of mens consciences and properties,

Secondly, consider what the Parliament hath done with great difficulties to accommodate the desires of the people in this behalfe, in suppressing the power of tyrants over mens consciences, in taking away all offensive and superstitious innovations, in granting liberty to all parishes to choose Lecturers, in opening the mouths of our godly Ministers, in taking away the power of oppressing and tyrannicall Courts of Lordly Prelates, in choosing a learned assembly of many godly and able Ministers for the settling of mens judgements, and the healing of the many divisions and unsound opinions amongst us in matters of Religion; and for mens properties, how some delinquents this way have been punished, and others detected, evill Ministers of Justice, by whom righteous and just causes have miscarried to the undoing of many poore widdows, fathersesse and others, are partly removed, and in a faire way of receiving their demerits; Ship-money, Coat and Condust-monics, Patents almost for every thing (to the daily draining and oppressing of the subject) are all taken away; and consider also, whether any one thing hath been transacted, or proposition made by them, which doth not in tuitu proprio, look at the future peace and good of the Kingdome.

Thirdly, confider, whether if this present Parliament should unhappily be discounteranced, discouraged, or distolved (which God forbid) we should ever have the like, or any; or if by vertue of the act for the Trienniall Parliament there should be another, whether any man bearing good will to the Common-wealth, being chosen, would be incou-

raged

raged thereunto, and so either we should have none at all, or if any, such an one which instead of a remedy should be an inlet of all mifery into the Land.

Foutthly, consider how Kingdomes abroad in the world are governed without Parliaments, where Voluntas Regis is Lex populi, the pleasure of the King is the rule of the Kingdome, and the precipitancy of this Kingdome also before this Parliament, into all oppression and misery, through the deceitfull suggestions and infinuations of wicked Councell about his Majesty; and whether we are not looked upon, as the envy of other kingdomes by vertue of this only inheritance of ours.

Fifthly, confider into what milery, blood and destruction we had plunged our selves two years since (The two Nations of England and Scotland, imbruing themselves, and weltring in one anothers blood) had not the wisdome of the Parliancent then present consisting for the most part of the same Members as this doth) denying the levying of monies for the maintaining of that war which should for ever make us thankfull for, and mindefull of a Parliament benefit.

e

up

ds.

re-

va-

ere ich

cu-

of oits our

nce

nfi-

ob-

es.

ons

me

ces

10-

ens

rty

ing

ga

nts,

Re-

and nif-

no-

mo-

ct)

ro-

ood

ite-

he-

ou-

ged

Sixthly, confider that whereas the Protestant Profession, and the subjects liberty, is pretended in all things; what good intent either can or could there be to the one or to the other, either in those former differences between us and our brethren, the Scots, or the present divisions in this Kindome, when Papists and popish persons were then the chiefe Commanders (for the most part) in the English Armies, and Papists new, and Popish persons, and Athiests, whose continual affertions are wounds and blood, and God damne me, or heavens damne me, if we be not revenged upon these round-heads (a nickname questionlesse, originally sprung up from some block-head, having neither wit nor reason in it) these are the maine abettors, provokers, projectors and actors in these divisions, whether these aime at the Protestant Religion, whatever they call the Protestant Profession except it be Popery, in all things, supremacy only excepted or the subjects liberty, let every man of the meanest capacity judge.

Seventhly, confider what tampering there hath beene this two or three yeares to raife up civill Wars amongft us in the three Kingdomes: First betweene Us and the Scots, then, that now so rife in Ireland, and amongft us dive the mes, as when the Army in the North was plotted to be brought up against the Parliam nt, and of late the bold peremptory and unparalleld contempt and reproach cast upon the House of Commons, by those unworthy Cavaliers which accompanied his Majesty to the House of Commons at the accusation of the five members, their cruelly abusing, cutting and mangling of the Citizens, their endeavour to raise up a party at Kingston upon Thames, and now also to do the like in the North, all tending to Civill Wars and mutinies amongst Us, and whether the same spirit which worketh so hot in Ireland, hath no saftors in Scotland, and amongst us in England, let all men that have the right faculty of discerning judge, and whether they that endeavour to raise up Civill Warres in a Kingdome, can ayme at the good of that Kingdome, let every man that hath not loft the use of reason determine.

Eightly, consider what unheard of misery, barbarous cruelty, savage inhumanity is exercised upon the poore Protestant party in Ireland, by that bloody Popish party, and how far those that endeavour to make a party against the Parliament, are asted by the same designes, let those judge and consider who either have or will reade the Irish Remonstrance, and observe how these distractions at home (occasioned by the unhappy divisions and distance of his Majesty through wicked Counsell from his Parliament) encourage the Rebels, and hinder the Protestant cause there, whereas a happy concarrence betweene the King and Parliament might in an ordinary way through Gods mercy have subdued those wicked Rebels long sithence.

A 2

Ninthly, confider what repro ch, scandall, and scorne we shall bring upon our whole Nation and posterity for ever, if we should chuse a Parliament, and because they will not suffer us to be made slaves; even for their saithfulnesse and love unto us (when happily their owne particular safety and personall Preference might be better advanced if they should desert us) if for this we should rise up against them, and contend, strive, and sight for an Iron voke of perpetuall bondage and misery, and whether God may not in displeasure and justice, give us up hereunto, who shall so lightly esteeme, and so so trissly improve that opportunitie, which (long look't for) he hath now put into our hands: and if our posterity will not curse the time that ever it entred into our hearts so to doe.

Tently, consider how it can stand with our Protestation, to take up Armes against the whole body of the Kingdome, represented in the Parliament and the Lawes of the Land, which we are all bound by Oash to stand to, the utmost of our lives, liberties and estates, and wherein the honour and preservation both of King and Kingdome doth confist, and which of those doe breake their Oath, either those that pretending the Kings Prerogative take up Armes against the whole Kingdome represented in the Parliament a or those that shall indeavour to suppresse such a malignant party. The King himselfe having alwayes protested, that for his part (taking God to witnesse) he desireth nothing more then the peace and prosperity of Religion and Kingdome.

Eleventhly, consider whereas lawes and Statutes are pretended, as if the Parliament should doe many things illagally event against the King, with this suggestion, that then its high time for the Subjects to looke to their properties and liberties, whether are to be believed what is Law: either the partie that shall affirme this, or that to be Law, and will not appeare to maintaine their affertions (the King professing himselfe to be no Lawyer, and therefore his affirmations are nothing else but the misinformations of others or the Parliament, the makers of new, and interpreters of the old Lawes, who have all the Judges and chiefest Lawyers in the Land to advise with all, taking this with us, that Salus Populi oft Suprema lex? and whether both the Law of the Land, and the good of the subject was not pretended in all the Patents granted, as appeares in the severall Proclamations for the same purpose, yea, and in the high Commission and Star-Chamber Courts (for it had beene as much as amans eares, liberty as estate have beene worth to have affirmed the contary) and if it were so, let the whole Kingdome judge.

Twelfly, consider whether that all the wholsome Lawes, benefits, and liberties of the subject this day have not beene the birth and fruits of Parliaments, and whether the Parliament hath not alwayes beene the sanctuary and refuge for all that have beene unjustly oppressed and abused, and what remedy could be had by any other appeales whatsoever, when through the weickednesse of evil Ministers of Justice, the strength of mans purse, rather than the righteousnesse of his cause, hath alwayes beene the bonum omen, the certaine promising token of good successe: consider therefore whether wee shall not goe about to stop, year o dry up all the Springs of our legall Priviledges, having such long and I appy experiences of the benefits thereof, and whether it ever entred into the heart of any of our Predecessors except the Papilts, to doe the lest miury to Parliaments.

Whereas it is obiected against the Parliament, that they raise factions, seditions, malicious against the King and his royall race, that under other pretences of danger of forraigne and domesticke enemies, they take up Armes against the King; that they endeavour to destroy the Lawes of the Land; and Religion amongst us. Consider, whether that the e, and greater than these aspersions, were not cast upon our brethren, the Scots, the odious name of Traytors, Rebels, Fastious, Sedious, &c. were cast upon them; it had been almost death for any man to have affirmed the contrary; and yet when things came legally

th

15

ar

di

th

de

m

11

ou

the

Su

thi

co

wa

ha

Sul

cha

Kat

for

fron

mar

Irif

lan

mon

the

ub

legally to be debated, all proved otherwise, and His Maiesty himselfe did acknowledge the contrary; and there is no question but (those wicked Incendiaries betweene His Maiesty and His Parliament, being once removed) there will be a cleare and mutuall apprehension and right understanding betweene his Maiesty and his Parliament, to the mutuall joy and comfort, both of his Maiesty and his well affected Subjects in the three Kingdomes: And consider, whether it is not to be doubted, that the same sire-brands of combustion amonst us now, be not those that were formerly between us and our neighbour Nation, and whether they be not in the same designes of consustion of both Nations still, altering onely the method, beginning in England now, with hopes to end in Scotland, whereas they formerly begun there, with purposes to end here.

Thirteenthly, confider, That whereas many inconfiderately, and others maliciously suggest this against the Parliament, That their remedy is worse then their disease, for they are eased of their Taxations of Shidings, by impositions of Pounds, Subsidie upon Subsidie, Pole-money, Monies adventured, Monies lent, &c. But let such confider, that the disease being mortall, the cure may be the more smarting, yet the more salutiferous: and they are not alwayes the worst Physicians that advise of Philosotomic, or blood I tring for a desperate disease, the voines may fill againe, when the heart is whole, which sinking the man dies, when the veines are full.

le

ot

ly

y

ht

1-

ly

d

he

J,

s, ve.

at

es

he

nt

en

be

ill

r, ne es

sli

as he

he

10

rly

r, e, r-

a - nd

ly.

i-

r-

2-

at

d.d

e

Leis true, much hath been done this w. y, but God is not behinde hand with us, we have had our pennyworths for our penny already : that which the Parliament ha h done (through Gods mercies) mentioned in the second Consider tion, is worth more then our Costs and Charges. Moreover, it is not unknown, that the very Ship-mony did cost the Kingdome above two-hundred-thousand-pounds a yeare: Coat and Conduct Mony, and other Military charges, little leffe then that : few of the Monopolies did prejudice the Subjects above a million yearely: the Soape a hundred-thousand-pounds: the Wine three-hundred-thousand-pounds: the Leather could be little lesse then both: the Salt could be no leffe than that : all thefe, with many other inferiour Monopolies, are taken away : and because that with the same shew of Law, Justice and Reason, the Subjects might have been drained to the utmost penny that they were worth, these procuring the chiefest places and Offices, who were most curring in deviling new designes of oppressing the Subjects, therefore the root of all these wrongs (which is more beneficiall then all the rest) which was an Arbitrary power pretended to be in his Maiesty, of taxing the Subject, and tharging their estates without consent of Parliament, is now declared to be against Law, by both Houses, and likewise by an act of Parliament, consider also, that these present tarations are but for the prefent, and in a legall way, and nothing fo great as the former: and for the recovering of poore bleeding Ireland, and the faving of this staing and staggering Kingdome from ruine and destruction.

And when men have parted with so much as they would once have given to be freed from the High Commission Rods, and Star-chimber-lash being under them (as every man might ex pect to have been) for that which neither Gods nor mans Law calls sin, nay, when men have given as much as they would to be freed from slavery, as much is the poor trise Protestants would give to be freed from the cruelty of those bloodhound Papists; nay, as much as their wives, children, estates, lives, Gospell is worth (for all lies bleeding) et them then complaine of their hard bargaine, and not before: And as for those wicked landerers of that faithfull Assembly, who cannot endure to think that others would deale more honestly then themselves in the like trust, that give out, as if they would convert the politique stocke for their personall gaine, a cleare and just accompt being given herein to the whole Kingdome, it is to be hoped, that such shall be made publique examples for such sublique standers.

Lastly, consider, whether (amongst others) there be not a three-fold ground of the proceedings against the Parliament, according to the threefold condition of the chiefe actor in these divisions, who are Papists, depending Gentlemen, preferred to high places and Offices, whose policy rather then honesty, hath been their rise hereunto, and desperant Cavaliers, whose good husbandry it is to put all upon their backs, & Thist for their ballies Irst, the Papists see now, and well perceive, that the Parliament making progresse ac Coording to their beginnings, will take away the least hopes of ever establishing that Antichristian Religion here amongst us : yea, and take away the very ground worke of fa ture Plots and Projects this way; and therefore it stands them now upon, Summo labore, with all might and maine, to adventure upon any designe, (though never so desperate) and to give out themselves in their estates, lives and livelihoods, usque ad extremum, to the utmost that they can; and therefore now, though Jesuites should be hanged by the halfe dozens, they will adventure, for now or never must the Pope up or downe in this Kingdome, and he would not willingly lose his hopes here, though a thousand of his fessione should hang for it, for indeed if men would receive it, that is the quarrell in the land, whe ther Michael or the Dragon, Christ or the Pope shall get safest footing in this Island, and let any feeing man look back upon all former proceedings, and confider, who hath beer preferred to the highest places in the Church ? What their carriage hath been therein? how the Preaching of the Word (the confounding weapon of Antichrift) hath been supprest What superstitious innovations hath been introduced; who have been promoted into h the chiefest places in the Universities, what proportion there hath been with the Masse b houses, in Candlesticks, Tapours, Copes, blasphemous Pictures of God and the holy Triangle nity, Crucifixes, Croffes, &c. First in the Bishops Chappels, then in all the Cathedrals of the Kingdome, then by little and little in every Parish; Again, what hath been their pro ceedings at their Commission Courts? And what their plot was in their cursed late Ca. nons, and the Et catera Oath? and then let him give his Judgement in the point, whether Popery hath not been the mark they aymed at ?

Secondly, for the depending Gentlemen, advanced to high places and Offices, whole aimes will hold proportion with that of Cardinall Woolfey (for me and my King) making his Majesty but the Priest, and scarce paying his tythes out of all their pretendings, their is Masters profit, whose veines are full of the blood of the fatherlesse and the widdowes, and whose houses are built with the ruines of poore innocents, who regard more the blessings and favours of men, then the curses of the Almighty for their oppression and cruelty, these salfo know, and well perceive now, that if the Parliament proceed according to their beginnings, they shall not only be exposed to the Justice of their former demerits, but also a lost the least hopes of any suture favour or practise, because conscious to themselves of an utter impossibility in them for ever of becomming housest men, who from their first beginnings of preferment, have cashiered out of their thoughts the seare of God, a good by conscience, and the day of Judgement; and therefore they must either run beyond seas, she betake themselves to some mean condition or other, (for the Parliament they le have venone but just men, whose proceedings in all their Ministrations must be by the rule of Jumone but just men, whose proceedings in all their Ministrations must be by the rule of Jumone but just men, whose proceedings in all their Ministrations must be by the rule of Jumone but just men, whose proceedings in all their Ministrations must be by the rule of Jumone but just men, whose proceedings in all their Ministrations must be by the rule of Jumone but just men, whose proceedings in all their Ministrations must be by the rule of Jumone but just men, whose proceedings in all their Ministrations must be by the rule of Jumone but just men, whose proceedings in all their Ministrations must be by the rule of Jumone but just men, whose proceedings in all their Ministrations must be by the rule of Jumone but just men, whose proceedings in all their ministrations must be by the rule their utmost endeavours to the rooting up of this Parliament.

Thirdly, the Cavaliers, whose lands, houses, revenues and estates are above in the ayre who make great brags of the dangerous attempts they have adventured by sea and land by whose greatest danger of drowning hath been in an Ale-tub or Wine-tubs; ex of smother ing by the smoake of Tobacco: yet they know that it is good sishing in troubled waters, and that England is sull of brave booties, therefore they bestir themselves, and have scarce the patience to forbeare their prey till opportunity serves their turne, who are all for the present; and as for the other world, they have past the dreadfull sentence against themselves, which is (harestoreforems). God damne me: These three forts are the leaders and provokers of a party against the Parliament, and incendiaries between his Majesty and them: Let the whole world of indifferent men judge and see, if these be not the Parties, and whether these be not their grounds, and yet these are the men looked upon, as the only above, lis Majesty, but by such courses, practises and counsels, which alienateth affections between him and his best Subjects, wherein consists his honour and strength, who are willing to to the shalfe the God of all knowledge shall one day judge and discover, whose hearts have been most loyall to our dread Soveraigne, either of the one or the other.

As for those Noble men, whose absence from the Parliament is an incouragement unto this Malignant party, if they come under the two first rankes of Popish, or dependent to this Malignant party, if they come under the two first rankes of Popish, or dependent men; there is no more to be said but this; their gathering together, and appearing in such courses, is a pregnant testimony and justification of what hat been said of those two forts, namely, That their designe is Summo Conata, to root up the Parliament, lest the Parliament should roote up them; but if there be any not under these rankes, certainely, either their ingenuity is to labour for pacification, and a happy making up of that breach between his Majesty and his Parliament, or else their Nobility is mero titulo, little Tri. Noble blood runs in the veines, and Heathens themselves may throw stones at them, also of whose progenitors have been rendered famous by their heroick acts for their Countries

r pro cause.

ether

From all these Considerations, this may be Well inferred.

whole T Hat if ever we would improve our felves, for God, the King, the Kingdome, lives, aking T Lawes and liberties, our felves and poore posterity. if wee would not see our floutheir rishing Cities made ruinous heapes, our peace and plenty turned into blood and Famine, s, and our dearest wives ravished and ript up before our faces; our tender childrens braines fings dash'd against the Rones, our mutuall trading turned into violence and Robbery, our thefe sweete enjoyments of all relations, unto murders, rapes, cuelties upon them all: If in a ir be word we would not have the line of Germany and Ireland, to be stretched over our good Land: if we have any love to the Gospell of life and salvation, that the Arke of God of at may not depart, and mifery come in upon us, as we would not be exposed to the power It be and mercies of the bloody Papists the badge of whose Arch-leader (the Deviills firstborne) the Popes garments made red with the blood of the Saints. Let every man in his feas, station study peace and union, and endeavour all meanes of pacification, abhorring the have very thoughts of ever taking up Armes against either King or Parliament, but to the utf Ju most of our powers, setting our selves against the incendiaries between them Both, that e out the peace of God, and the God of peace may still rule in the midst of us, that we render not our felves Ludibrium gentium, the mocking stock of nations, by doing that our felves ayre which the malice, power and policy of all our adversaries abroad, and enemies at home, and by all these sourescore yeares endoavours could never effect, whereby we shall expose the poore Protestant bleeding and panting cause in Ireland to destruction, and revive the hopes, yea and the power of our former oppressors (who if they once get up againe, wi teare us in pieces, like Lions long kept from their prey) and our ruine shall be unto after ages, the everlasting shamefull monuments of our blindnesse and folly; that we should rife up like unnatural Children, and cut the throate of our own mother Nation : That w should love bondage rather then liberty, all Nations, Countries, and People, Papists Jews, Turkes, Infidels, Devils. (if I may fay fo) will sport at our milery : When God would deliver us, and bath delivered us from all their plots and projects, when in man plots they have had the neck of the whole kingdome, as of one man, upon the block; and as easie it had been utterly to destroy it, had not the Almighty by a high hand of love and mercy prevented it ? Shall the cloud of blood, which hath been a long time impending over our heads, be disburdened upon us, and our reeling, fraggering and tottering King. dome shall fall, and fall, and none shall help it up. It now pants for life and breath, tra vailing with the peace, plenty, fecurity, Religion, Lawes, liberties and comforts thereof and those Worthies who day by day give their utmost and unwearied attendance and all fistance to further the birth, the strong God shall be unto them their front-guard, and rere-ward, his goodnesse, power and mercy unto them and theirs ammunition of rockes and his displeasure the certaine ruins and destruction of those, who unhappily, weakly and wickedly have brought it upon themselves.

It is and shall be my prayer, that we our selves to our selves be not the greatest enemies but who are those that are the plotters? who are the disturbers of the peace and State! those of the Malignant party. And who are those? Too many I confesse, but I will name but some, and those of whom I intend this discourse, those are chiefly the Pamphleters Men indeed whom the State need not very much to feare, for they discover their own plots as fron as they have hatcht them, and therefore did they hatch them, to discover them, and indeed their main plots to get mony. Although these cannot endanger the State, yet I think it would be far quieter, were these whipt out of it. For how many bas Libels are cast about, some against the King, others against the Parliament, Some for foot will inveigh against the Puritans, Brownists, and Seperatists, some against the Papists the evill Councellors the malignant party, all in such foolish language, with such ridiculous termes, fuch pedlers French, as both the Titles and the Bookes shew what the Authors are, drunkards, fooles and ideots, the Titles often comprehenping in them more than the work it selfe, and that stuffed with such poore (yet those too borrowed) pharles as render the persons they speake against, though not lesse vitious, yet lesse despicable some of them the other day first lookt in their purse, then through their prospective, or i may be their drinking glaffe, and straight, either they faw double, or there was a great Fleet come from France, or Spain, or Rome, or furely from some part of the Low-countries, against England or the Parliament, many brasse pieces they had, and much powder, But this must not be left out, that they were all Papists; while these things are suffered, the whole fault lights upon the times,

O the never enough to be lamented badnesse of the times doth every one cry out. O that we had better times. And let those times, if so they be, or father those ill men of the times justly suffer what their untimely vices, exorbitant actions, and damnable determines n tions have justly merited, and undoubtedly deferved.

FINIS.